ITEMS DEBATED

European Semester 2017

The Council held a policy debate (6265/17) on the European Semester 2017. Focusing on the implementation of the country-specific recommendations, it discussed how to enhance labour market access and reduce divergence across the EU.

Ministers highlighted that the employment and social situation in the EU is slowly improving.

Towards the end of 2016, the EU registered the lowest unemployment rates since 2009. Similarly, the youth and long-term unemployment rates are decreasing.

At the same time, these positive trends are not uniform throughout the Union. In certain regions, unemployment levels continue to be high. Furthermore, the number of people at risk of poverty is still concerning, despite recent signs of improvement.

In recent years, the EU has faced a multitude of challenges which have not affected all member states in the same way. The member states have strived to implement policies to address structural weaknesses.

In this context, the implementation of the country-specific recommendations is of paramount importance. The EU has slowly been making progress. It is important to continue and multiply these efforts so as to achieve economically sustainable and socially inclusive growth throughout the Union.

The Council adopted conclusions on the 2017 annual growth survey (6885/17) and the joint employment report, both of which address priorities for action in the areas of employment and social policies.

It adopted the joint employment report (6887/17), which provides an annual overview of key employment and social developments in Europe and of member states' reform actions.

The Commission presented to the Council an overview of the 2017 country reports (6318/17).

Coordination of social security systems

The Council held an orientation debate on an amended regulation on the coordination of social security systems, on the basis of a presidency note (6269/17).

The debate was intended to provide political orientation from the outset since the work in the relevant Council working party has recently started.

The presidency summarized the debate as confirming that the revision of the directive is important and necessary. There is the will, interest and spirit of mutual cooperation amongst ministers for achieving progress on this dossier.

Ministers highlighted the importance of proper codification of case law, greater simplification and clarity of rules, legal certainty and transparency.

It also emerged from the debate that there was a lack of agreement on a series of elements and issues, including the extension of unemployment benefits. Indexation is a particularly contentious issue and currently gives rise to diverging and contrasting views.

It is clear that there are various elements related to equal treatment and posting of workers that need further clarification.

The Maltese presidency reaffirmed its commitment towards the negotiations on this proposal. More work needs to be done and compromises need to be reached on the path ahead.

The new regulation

The new proposal (15642/16), presented in December 2016, is intended to update and modernize provisions on the coordination of European social security systems. It will increase legal clarity, establish fair and equitable burden-sharing and improve enforcement through simpler administrative rules.

In particular, the proposal focuses on access to social benefits in four areas:

- unemployment benefits,
- long-term care benefits,
- economically inactive mobile citizens, and
- family benefits.

The Commission also proposes strengthening the administrative rules on social security coordination for posted workers and giving member states' authorities better tools to address any unfair practices or abuse.

Tripartite Social Summit (TSS)

The EPSCO Council was informed of the preparations for the TSS to be held on 8 March. The main theme of the summit is "The future of Europe: charting the course towards growth, employment and fairness". The three sub-themes cover the following issues (i) making work pay as a way to promote employment and social inclusion; (ii) new forms of work and the future of industry; and (iii) the European pillar of social rights and the role of the social partners.

Enhancing the skills of women and men

The Council adopted conclusions (6889/17) on enhancing the skills of women and men in the EU labour market. The conclusions highlight the importance of enhancing skills as a means of supporting women's and men's participation in the labour market.

The conclusions are based on a research note (6268/17 ADD1) from the European Institute for Gender Equality.
